No dragon was hurt while this book was written. One helmet, a little. —J.

I read it first. Then we'll see. —J.

If you find it, return it. Not here: to its owner.

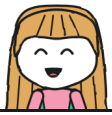

This stamp marks what only happens in the story: real dragons don't exist and packages don't fly back. To play in a real yard, see page 76. —J.

WHO'S WHO

Gus. Saturday courier. This notebook is his. He wants Crumb to come to him.

Julie. Writes in green and signs J. Always has a better idea. Even when nobody asks.

Tony. Delivers for LIGHTNING, in ten minutes or it's free. Since this week, he knows how to wait too.

Mara. Owner of Impossible Deliveries. Wears a witch's hat. Knows more than she says.

Vera. Looks after the dragons at the Dragon House. Sets the conditions.

Crumb. A dragon hatchling. She can take off now. Coming down is the hard part.

Package No. 4. Flat and wide. The label says: OPEN ON THE FLOOR.

R. Sends the packages nobody can deliver. Nobody says R.'s name.

DELIVERY NOTEBOOK 4
by Gus

FINAL.

Notebook 3 ended with a little bell. This one is lilac, and it has the shop's stamp too.

This time I was the first to write in it. Julie waited with her marker uncapped until I lent her the notebook.
"Ready?" she asked.
"Ready."

"Final" means I read it first. Then we'll see. —J.

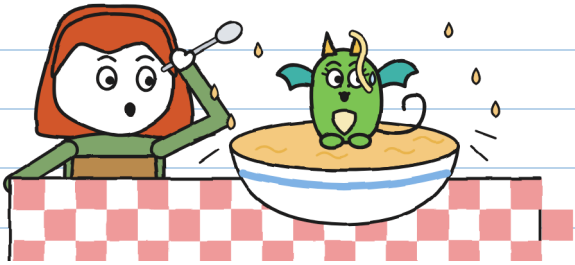

CHAPTER 1

Four Corners

In Mara's shop there are packages nobody has been able to deliver. They're on a shelf. There were twenty. Julie and I have delivered three: a dragon egg, some seeds that ran, and a little bell. Seventeen are left.

The egg was Crumb. Crumb can take off now. What she can't do is work out where to come down.
Yesterday she came down in Vera's soup.

VERA'S SOUP (yesterday)

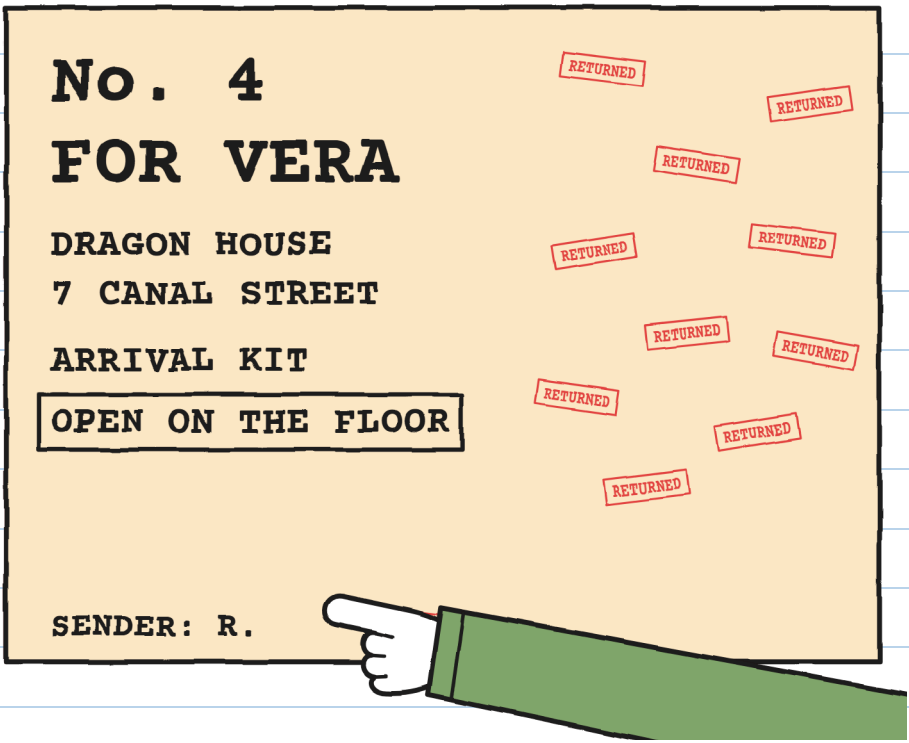

Noodle soup. With dragon. —J.

Vera came to ask for help and Tony offered. But first he had a delivery. He came back in nine and a half minutes, left his bike at the door and sat on his crate. "I already know how to wait," he said. "But I didn't need to start today."

Then Mara took a package down from the top shelf and put it on the counter.
"Vera. This is yours."

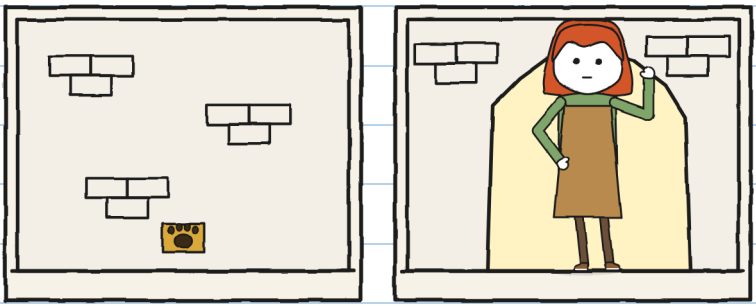

The label on No. 4 says a lot more than Tonykins's did. This one even comes with instructions.

Vera read the label with her finger. She stopped at the R. that said who sends the package.

"Eleven times?" asked Julie, who had already counted the stamps.
"Nine times, at 7 Canal Street, there was only a wall," said Mara.
"And why didn't we take it together with the egg?" asked Julie.
"I took it later, twice," said Mara. "And both times the wall opened."
"Both times I said 'not yet'," said Vera. "Crumb couldn't fly yet; I didn't need it."
"And today?" asked Mara.
"Yesterday Crumb chose my soup."

MARA'S ELEVEN ATTEMPTS

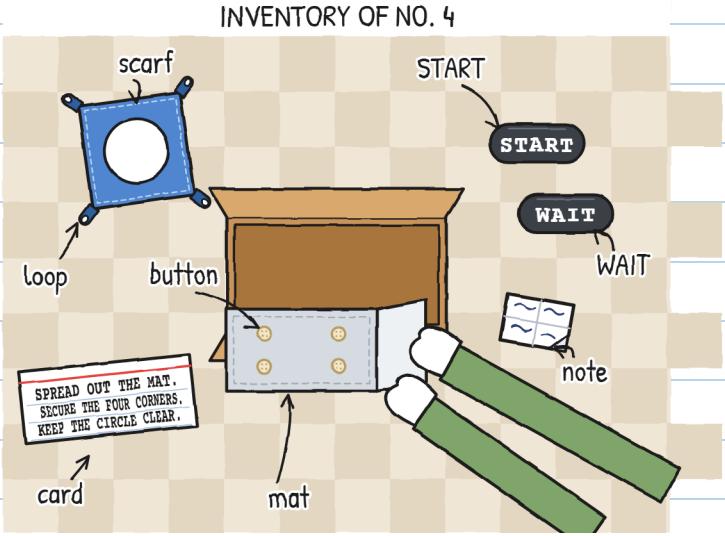

the wall: 9 times

Vera: "not yet," 2 times

"Opening it or trying it out isn't receiving it," said Mara. "If Vera doesn't sign the label in ink that doesn't come off, the package goes back at dawn."
"I know," said Vera. "I just want to see if it works."

The label said OPEN ON THE FLOOR, so Vera knelt on the shop floor and opened the package there. Tony crouched beside her and counted the pieces out loud. It was the first time I'd heard him count anything other than minutes.

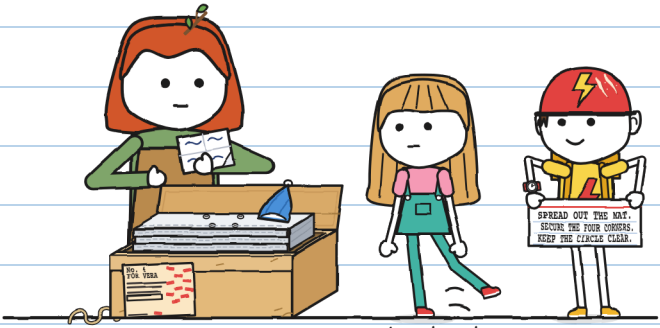

"Five things," said Tony. "And a note."

The card had three lines, typed on a typewriter:

1. SPREAD OUT THE MAT.
2. SECURE THE FOUR CORNERS.
3. KEEP THE CIRCLE CLEAR.

The note was shorter. Vera unfolded it, read it and folded it back into four. She didn't read it aloud. "For the yard," she said. And she put the note away inside the box.

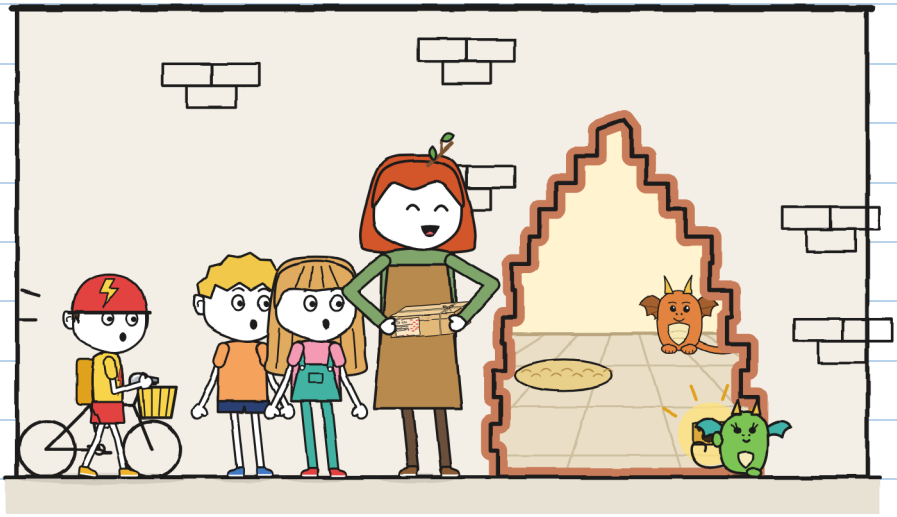

tap, tap, tap

I saw Julie's questions lining up. And her foot.

Questions I didn't ask: six. I'm improving. —J.

Mara set her usual conditions: the arrival kit leaves with Vera, comes back inside its box, and the label stays on.

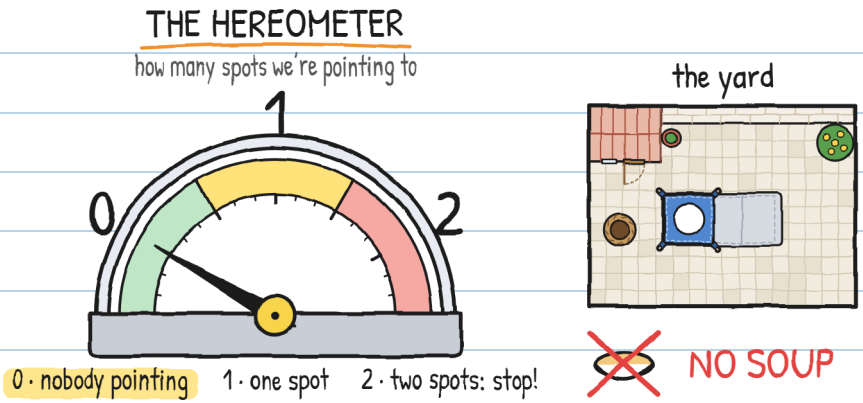

We all went to 7 Canal Street. In front of the wall, Crumb climbed down from Vera's arms. She rested her paw on the brass plate.
The wall opened.

Tony took a step back with his bike. He had seen the wall open once before, but at night. In daylight it's more impressive: you can see everything.

In the yard, Vera put the box on the ground. She lined the three of us up.
"My conditions. One: we practice only with me watching. Two: there's only one arrival spot. Three: when I say 'enough', it's enough."

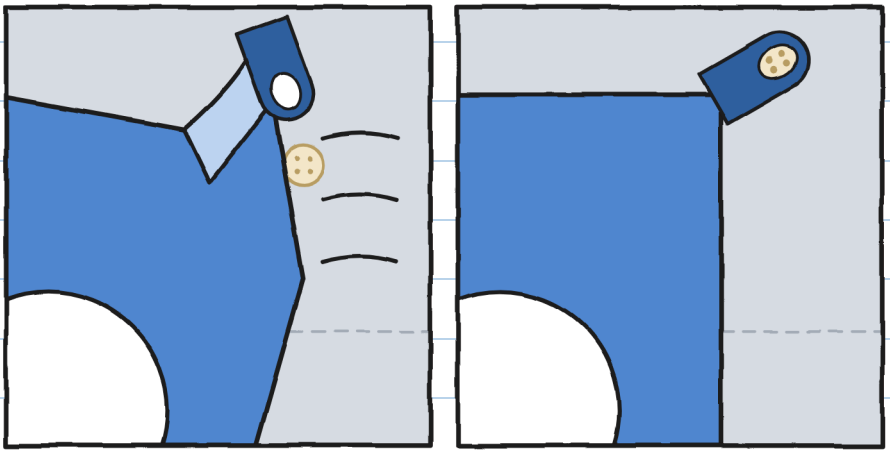

I wrote it down. Underneath I drew a gadget for counting spots. In one corner of the plan I drew a bowl of soup with a cross through it: NO SOUP. Just in case.

A machine for counting up to two. Very nice. —J.

We spread the mat out in the middle of the yard. Julie put the scarf on top and fastened two loops.
"Done."
"Look at the edge," said Vera.

A little air blew past and the loose corner of the scarf lifted, like an ear. Julie fastened the other two without a word.

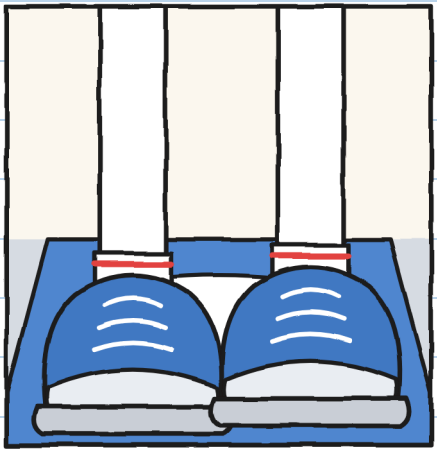

BEFORE AFTER

I was going to do it. The wind got there first. —J.

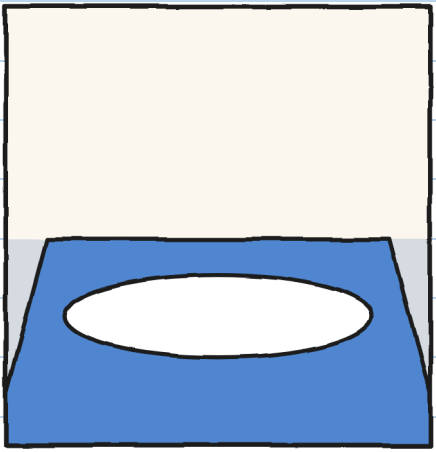

Then I wanted to help. I stood in the white circle.
"Crumb, here. Here!"

Crumb came walking over, very pleased, and sat on my sneaker.
"You're showing her your sneakers," said Vera.

I stepped out of the circle. Crumb looked at the empty circle. She sniffed it. She went in and sat down in the middle.

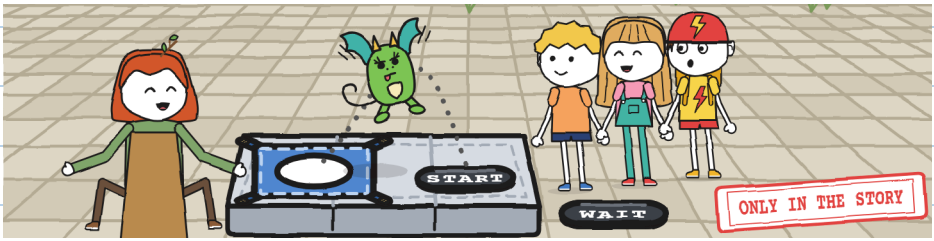

1. What Crumb saw

2. What she saw next

Vera put Crumb on the START mark, at one end of the mat. It was one meter twenty from the center of the circle. She put us behind the WAIT mark.
"One small jump. Just one."

Crumb beat her wings and rose a handspan. Two seconds later, she came down with all four paws inside the circle.
"Enough. For today, enough."

I wrote down: "She came to me." Then Julie unfastened the four loops and lifted the scarf to fold it. Crumb turned her head and followed the scarf with her eyes.

You were behind the mark. She went to the circle. —J.
