DELIVERY NOTEBOOK 5
by Gus

Notebook 4 is finished. This one is pink, like sugar.

I wrote one word on the first page. Julie read it upside down.

Whoever says "calm" doesn't know. —J.

CHAPTER 1

Two Invitations

My birthday was perfect: nobody sang. I invented a gadget.

Noise 1: teatime, not a birthday. —J.

"Wednesday the 21st is my birthday," said Julie.
"We'll celebrate together
on Saturday the 24th," I said.
"At five."
We both knew what the party would be like.

Julie needs a calm afternoon.
She's always running and asking questions. A teatime with no noise, on the bench.
It was a surprise. She only had to come.

I found out her plan the following Friday. She wrote it in my notebook.

Gus needs a party and music. –J.

I gave Tony four blue envelopes.
"They're for you, Mara, Vera and Flora. It's a surprise."

"A surprise I can keep," said Tony.

Julie gave Tony nine green envelopes. "It's a surprise for Gus."

Tony opened a blue one and a green one. They said the same thing.

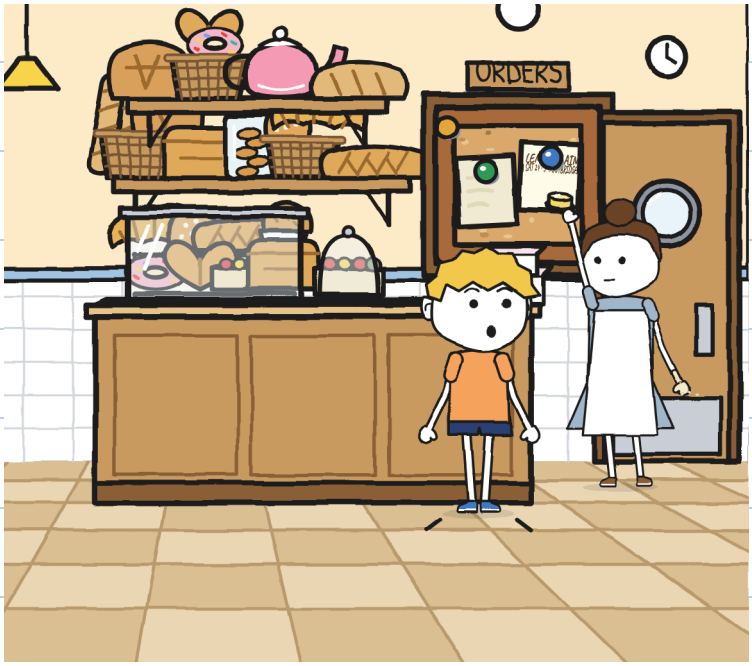

I went to the bakery to order a cake.
I thought I saw green dungarees.
I thought they were
another pair of dungarees.

They were mine. Ellie got me out. —J.

"A lemon cake for Saturday, at five," I said.
There was already another
order sheet, face down.
"I have another cake at that time. It's a secret."

I thought it was somebody else's. Lots of people have birthdays in October. "I have one oven and two hands. I'll go to one place only," said Ellie. "You lot decide the place."

I didn't get "you lot decide" either. —J.

Tony sorted the envelopes by colour.

"At LIGHTNING, a package with two addresses doesn't leave."

"Which two addresses?"

Tony put away a blue
envelope and a green one.
Mara took down the box of No. 5. Crack!
"Ellie's coming at five."

Two envelopes, none the wiser. —J.
